ON THURSDAY 24TH FEBRUARY, the Quorn Ladies Pennant Bowling Team played the Grand Final against Whyalla Golf Red (who were the minor premiers). Quorn, in only their second year of competition, won 43 shots to 36.

Quorn were placed in 4th position at the end of the minor round. After finishing last in the previous season, they are now Premiers-a fantastic effort. There were 7 teams in the Spencer Gulf Ladies Bowling Association- 2 teams each from Whyalla, Port Augusta, ETSA and one from Quorn made up the competition.

A huge turnout of spectators from all towns were present and added to the finals atmosphere. Both teams bowled extremely well throughout the whole day.

Just Another Ruin?

THROUGHOUT THE FLINDERS RANGES wherever one travels you will invariably come across a ruin of some description, ranging from abandoned mines, settlements, homesteads and single dwellings.

All have a story to tell, some well gazetted, others just local legend. This particular dwelling falls into the latter.

Situated high in the Arden Hills property of Graham and Inge Stokes is a one roomed stone cottage. Local legend is that many years ago a man by the name of Havelburg built the house from local meadow stone with the intention of wooing his 'bride to be' into setting up home there. Sadly she took one look at the place, ran off and married someone else.

On examination of the ruins it appears the house was never occupied, eg; the fireplace has no evidence of smoke or cooking, no trees or introduced plants that prevail at most ruins.

Water would also have been a major problem, as a fair distance away is a very small dam and no trace of a tank stand for collecting rainwater from the house roof.

Just another ruin?

NO just another story.

The ruins used to be accessible from the Nathaltee Track. This is now closed and is private property.

Thanks to Graham & Inge for allowing me to access the site.

Chat with a Quornie Margaret Summerton

I was BORN on 27th June 1944, in the old hospital in First St (Now Elizabeth House). I had one brother, John, (deceased at 55) and three sisters—Irene, Loraine and Shirley. I was the first girl.

Mum and Dad—Gertrude and Alf Hall, were second generation Quorn people. They married before Dad joined the Light Horse Brigade, and went to WW2, serving with the Australian armed forces in Borneo.

Dad's WW2 medals from the Pacific Campaign

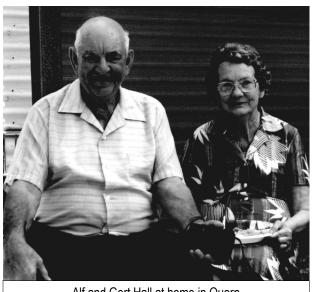

My brother (John Ernest) and I were born in the war years, and brought up by Mum and Dad's parents, Grandma and Grandpa Hall. (Grandpa Hall died in 1943 and Grandma in July 1957).

When Dad came home from the war in 1946 he worked with the railways for a short time. He'd been a cook in the army, so enjoyed cooking at weekends.

He made beautiful sponge cakes, and many of our meals. I remember his kangaroo tail stew, with fluffy dumplings bubbling up and down on the top.

Mum and Dad bought a house on Arden Vale Road. Irene, Loraine and Shirley were born while we lived there, and it was our family home for 21 years.

Later, our family moved to Frederick St, and we children all eventually left home, but Mum and Dad lived there for the rest of their lives. Dad passed away on 22nd May 2001, and Mum on 22nd July 2007.

Alf and Gert Hall at home in Quorn on Alf's retirement

After Dad left the railways, he joined PMG (now Telstra) as a linesman, and after 35 years service, retired in 1983. Mum stayed at home and looked after us five children.

I went to St Josephs (where Mum had also gone to school), and then on to Quorn High School on West Terrace, till I was 15.

First job

WHEN I LEFT SCHOOL, in 1959, I took a job with Mr and Mrs Ashley at the North Quorn General Store. (on Arden Vale Rd)

I bought a bike to ride round the town and collect orders to be filled and delivered. It was only a small shop, but it was very busy.

When the shop was sold to Ethel and Leo Nayda I stayed, till I got a cleaner's job at Quorn Hospital. Matron Allison was in charge.

I dreamt of being a nurse, and did a three months trial before I was to sign up for three years. When my parents were approached, they thought the job wasn't suitable for me, as I weighed only 7 stone (44kg).

Though I was disappointed, I went to work for Ken (Joe) Reid in the Newsagency and Dry Cleaning Service in Sixth St.

In 1962, Quorn residents felt a need for a swimming pool, so they held a meeting and formed a fundraising Committee. They decided to have a Town and Country Queen fundraising competition.

I was selected as Town Queen and Jaycy Pearce (now Reddaway), Country Queen. The activities raised £1500 (Decimal currency hadn't come in then. It would have been $3000 in the new money).

A range of popular entertainments took place—a Hairy Fairy Competition, a Mock Wedding, stage performances, and dances at woolsheds in Quorn and Bruce.

I remember two local ladies who made nearly all of the deb (debutante) and ball gowns at the time. Millie McHugh, who made my deb frock and Mrs Clark (the mother of exresident Lyn Friedinger).

Quorn Debutante Ball. Don Barber and Margaret Hall, Quorn Town Hall, 1962

Partnership

In 1963, Don Barber and I took over the North Quorn Store, where I'd worked for the Ashleys when I left school. Not a lot changed. We still put up the shutters at night, and delivered orders by bike to customers' doors.

In February, 1964, Roy Summerton and I were married. We had three children, Trevor, Karen and Kym.

I was still part-owner of the shop with Don, when Trevor was born. So I took him with me to work each day. When I delivered goods, he slept in a basket on the seat of the van.

When Karen came along, the partnership was dissolved, and I became a home mum, until Kym went to kindy. Then I had short hour jobs, so that I could pick up Trevor and Karen after school every day.

Years passed and my marriage fell apart. Roy and I went our separate ways.

I was employed as school canteen manager, and saw many children grow up in the 10 years I was there. Many are still living here.

In 1987 there was a fire in the administration area of the school, where the library and canteen were. The canteen had to close.

By that time I'd met Max McMahon, who became part of my life until he became ill, and passed away in 2004.

New starts

My NEXT JOB was at the Grand Junction Bottle Shop—a hard task for a non-drinker. Everyone but me knew what they wanted. Thank goodness for their patience, and as time went by the labels didn't all look the same.

When a staff vacancy came up at Flinders House, the matron, Dawn Paynter, accepted my job application. She gave me the chance to fulfil my lifetime dream.

I thank Dawn for the many challenges she gave me, the tears, laughter and memories that I still hold today.

Although I wasn't a nurse, I was working in the field, so I gave it a good shot. (I was a stone heavier than when I left school).

When I started, there were two parts to the Home. The ladies section and the men's, with about the same number in each section. It was my ideal job, and I loved the residents, no matter what the situation was.

One day, two fit elderly ladies, asked for permission to go home and check on their houses. When they returned they carried a big bag of oranges.

We could only guess where they came from. They didn't come from the local store. Apparently, one of the ladies (conveniently) had a ladder and an orange tree...

When the new Flinders House Aged Care Home was opened on West Terrace, I worked there. But times had changed, and aged care had not. I'd worked there for 10 years, and fulfilled my life's ambition, so I thought it was time I retired.

Max and I joined my sister Irene and her husband Bryce (Chandler) for a holiday, travelling round Australia in our caravans. Irene and Bryce continued travelling for months, but we came home.

In 2004, Max passed away. He'd told me I was meant to be a threepence, and I'd never be a sixpence, and he was right.

But, after his passing I found that I was rich in having my family, and the support of the Quorn community.

In those years, I travelled with relatives and a friend to Phuket, Thailand, Egypt, Pacific Islands, Sydney, the Gold Coast, Singapore and all over Vietnam.

Friendship

From 12, I had two very special friends, Dot Coad (Kevin's sister) and Carol Summerton, the daughter of Bill and Laurel Summerton.

Carol played cymbals in the Salvation Army, and went to Sunday School in the little hut (still) in Crombie's yard. I listened outside the fence. I guarantee it wasn't Elvis Presley!

We three have kept in contact, and enjoy short trips away together. We have fun and remember our Quorn days.

When I was growing up, I loved making new dresses for my dolls. As long as the front looked good, it didn't matter to me how much it was scrunched together at the back.

I had a Little Betty sewing machine, and Mrs Myrtle Norfolk, (Graham's mother), who lived across from Crombie's, gave me some advice—'Margaret, go home and fix that. Nothing's worth doing, unless it's done well'.

She tried teaching me to knit, with a set of Wonderful * knitting needles, joined at the points with a length of nylon tubing.

I could knit without ever having to start a new line, or change from plain to purl.

*May have been US 'Attached' knitting needles

Years later, when I was married to Max, I took out my needles to knit. His verdict was 40/100 for the try, but nothing for the result.

Now the highlights of my year are, Quorn Show; Trans Hotel Melbourne Cup Day lunch and the Quorn Race meeting.

I have six grandchildren, all grownup, and a great grandson, who has filled my days with love and laughter.

Leichhardt's Grasshopper

(Petasidia ephippigera)

In 1848, THREE YEARS after his initial expedition, Ludwig Leichhardt disappeared in the Australian Outback on what would be his last journey—he and his party were never found. For over one hundred years there were no records of his grass-hopper, until a sighting in 1971 by J.H. Calaby.

Unfortunately, in recent times it seems that the charismatic Leichhardt's Grasshopper may be teetering on the edge of extinction, and risks fading back into history, just as Ludwig did.

The current known distribution of the Leichhardt's Grasshopper is dotted across the Arnhem Land plateau and escarpment, including the Kakadu and Nitmiluk National Parks. And there was a single previous recorded sighting in southeast Arnhem Land (Barrow, 2009).

It is thought that, like many insects, this grasshopper's striking colouration is aposematic: meaning its conspicuous colours signal to predators that it's poisonous to eat (although no toxic chemicals have been found in either the animal or its food).

The spotting of the Pityrodia shrub was a clue to the presence of the grasshopper, because of its special relationship to this plant. Leichhardt's Grasshopper eats only a few species of Pityrodia which is in the mint family (Lamiaceae). Because they feed only on this daga (Kriol for food), their distribution is restricted by the plant's distribution, and they are both endemic to the Arnhem Land plateau and escarpment.

Although they can occur in locally high numbers, they are normally found in small groups, are sparsely distributed, and have a low dispersal rate. Often they complete their life cycle on just a single individual plant!

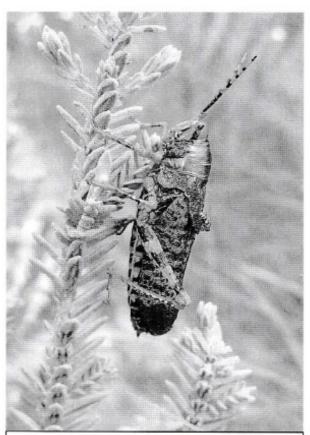

One last relationship reveals that out on Country, everything is connected. Pityrodia's distribution is strongly linked to fire. Although this plant cannot tolerate frequent intense fires, it is dependent upon some fire to survive. In the absence of fire it will be outcompeted by other plant species: in some cases mass mortalities have been observed. Therefore it needs frequent low intensity fires.

Modern-day northern Australian fire regimes are characterised by fires that are later in the monsoonal dry season, and which Cherry and the Rangers say are more frequent and more intense than traditional burning would have been in this region. Unburnt patches can act as refuges in stony country, a shelter for both plant and animal alike, but these are less likely to be protected during intense fires.

Thus, fire impacts these grasshoppers directly, and by burning their only food source. Research on Leichhardt's Grasshopper populations in Kakadu National Park suggests that modern changes in fire regimes have negatively impacted the species. Traditional Aboriginal burning patterns may have been better for them.

The Yugul Mangi Rangers want to protect Leichhardt's Grasshopper, its Pityrodia, and the area, by making 'right time fire' in the cooler months of July to September.

The Rangers took some of the grasshoppers to the local Ngukurr school, and told the students about them. None of them had ever seen these fascinating creatures before.

This hopper, Petasidia ephippigera, was found by Quorn's Bradley Murray on Jervois Station near a local water hole. This is a long way south of its normal habitat in Arnhem Land. Its common name is Leichhardt's Grasshopper

The Ruined Devil's Peak

HERE IS A VERY LONG STORY —

My family came to live in Adelaide at the start of 1947. Back then a major way of travelling, even around suburbs, was by train.

In 1950, just between 5 am and midday, passenger trains left Bridgewater for Adelaide at 5.07, 5.36, 5.59, 6.18, 6.27, 6.50, 7.34, 8.30, 8.48, 9.03, 10.35, and 10.54 am—twelve altogether! (Bridgewater today?—there are none.)

Quornies on the Devil's Peak c 1925. Look how people dressed up for a climb back then! Photo Jan Arnold

Train carriages back then had huge black-&-white photos all around their walls above the windows. They showed Australia's greatest tourist spots. Many were repeats. But I've never forgotten the three most common of them all.

Not in order: one was the 'Three Sisters of Katoomba'; one was the famous view inside the 'Jenolan Caves' of its stalactites & stalagmites; and one was the 'Devil's Peak, Quorn'.

I was ten when I first saw them. And the 'Devil's Peak' fascinated me most of all. Right there and then I was determined that one day I was going to climb it.

But that name! How could you possibly name a mountain after the Devil? In fact, around ten years ago I googled 'Devil/Devil's Peak/Mount/ Whatever', and think I found only three in the entire world, including ours.

Quorn's Greatest Attraction

I MANAGED TO CLIMB it in the mid-1950s. And I've been climbing it regularly ever since. It's not high that makes it so spectacular. It's that it's in a huge basin whose surrounding peaks are higher. So that view's such a beautiful one.

Yet today you might find it hard to believe that once our Devil's Peak was one of Australia's great tourist attractions.

Now, whenever I met people climbing the Devil's Peak, I stopped to ask them questions.

And one of the most fascinating things that I found out was from overseas visitors.

One thing they sometimes said, was that they were putting it on top of their list of must-see places in Australia, for their relatives, friends, and neighbours when they got back home.

Early in, I think 2010, Safari Bus Tour operators discovered the Devil's Peak. (They take adventurous young people touring Australia's outback.) They told me it was perfect for them. They'd leave Adelaide around 7am, reach Quorn around 3pm, and stop there so their passengers could shop and use the town's toilets.

Then they'd drive out to the Devil's Peak, and lead their passengers to the summit. When back down again they'd drive further north past Quorn to camp. News of this spread to other bus companies, even interstate. And I found that there were sometimes two buses there at a time.

Then one of them added a fascinating wrinkle to this. He kept his passengers on the summit to watch the sunset while they ate their dinner. And they'd come down by torchlight. That new twist became very popular. What a great stunt!

Then a driver-guide told me that companies were considering camping after this in Quorn itself, instead of driving further north to camp.

Came the Fire Season's start. Back then this meant the Devil's Peak was closed all the way through it. Just after this I met a bus stopped by the 'Closed' sign. Its driver-guide was fuming.

He said something like this: 'If Quorn doesn't want our business, I'll bloody-well make sure I never come here again! And I'll tell every other bus company never to come here again too!'

Modris Ozolins on The Stiletto, with the Devil's Peak behind him, 1st March 2010. Mt Brown is on the left on the horizon

Other Long-Time Activities

BACK IN THE 1930s up to the 1950s, while regular passenger trains were still running, city bushwalkers would catch a train to Woolshed Flat, hike from there to the southern end of the Devil's Peak Range, hike right along the top of its ridge, and then down and into Quorn.

1 What walking trails should look like

They'd camp overnight on the way. And they'd catch a train from Quorn back to Adelaide. A couple of times I went right along the top of the ridge to pick up thirty years of their rubbish, including two ancient water bottles, a billy, and even parts of a green sleeping bag!

'Rubbish' reminds me of when two of us took days to pick up all the rubbish at the foot of the great cliff below the summit. The most fascinating thing we found was a tiny Coolgardie Safe small enough to carry to the top. Sadly, it collapsed in our hands or we'd have brought it back to be restored and archived.

2 Devil's Peak Trail above one km

A second major activity on the Devil's Peak was rock climbing. It especially offers 'Kindergarten Climbs', that are great to teach new climbers on.

The Commonwealth owns the 100 square yards of the top, and I've met Soldiers there, who were practising abseiling down the summit's face—even during the bushfire season.

A third activity is Geology students from several Universities studying the geology of the Peak, which is apparently quite spectacular. One party was even from Melbourne University.

3 Yes! A 'Trail', the last 300 metres!

So, you can see that the past history of The Devil's Peak was a hugely busy one. And that it was one of our greatest assets where attracting visitors was concerned. At least it was, when the Trail was in any kind of good condition!

The Present Dangerous Trail

THERE NEVER WAS a planned and properly constructed walking trail up the Devil's Peak. From the start, Quornies just pushed through the scrub straight up to the top. Over time this turned the Trail into a human-made creek bed. And every heavy rainfall washes more dirt away and exposes still more rocks formerly buried under that dirt.

Look at photos 2 to 4. They're from earlier than 2016, too. And today the Trail's mostly much worse than this between 1 km and the summit at 1·3 km. Climbing over rocks like that is not merely punishing, it's now dangerous, too.

Look at photo 1. It's what a walking trail should be like. To get a steep trail to stay like that you normally zigzag it so the gradient is far less. And it's hard to see but there are three drains with mounds on their lower sides across that path to divert rainwater. They protect the trail from heavy rain gouging the dirt out. It's part of the cared-for trail on The Dutchman's Stern.

4 Can you believe this is the Trail?

The greatest danger is that many of the rocks in pics 2 to 4 are loose. Tread on one and you just might find yourself with a broken leg. Or pelvis. Or skull. Those rocks are dangerous.

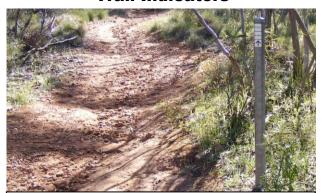

Thirty years' pleading, several reports, and even an expensive study, have led to scarcely anything at all being done to clean up this dangerous mess.

Several Quornies have told me that they're no longer game to climb the Devil's Peak. I don't blame them. In fact, though I feel sad to say it, if it were up to me, I'd close the Devil's Peak Trail permanently, until it's properly repaired, or better, re-laid by professional Hike Trail Makers. Otherwise, sooner or later someone's possibly going to be seriously injured.

If closed, it'll be the very sad end of what was once one of Quorn's greatest tourist attractions.

Trail Indicators

200-metre pole on the Devil's Peak Trail. Notice the trail turning into a creek bed, grossly widened by walkers to avoid it?

WALKING TRAILS ARE usually marked at regular intervals—how regular depends on how easy the trail is to see. Trails especially need to be marked at places where it's easy to go the wrong way and get lost. (See 'Rescue' below.)

The path in photo 1 on the previous page is easy to see, so the markers on it are only poles every 200 metres, that also inform you how far you've walked and how far you still have to go.

But over shale and through the pine forest on the Warren Gorge Trail the path scarcely shows at all, so line-of-sight white markers are used.

The problem on the Devil's Peak is that there are three sets of markers that have been installed over the decades, without the older ones being removed. One set is the red triangular ones such as that shown below, nailed to trees.

Red Triangle markers. Vandals removed this one, turned it to point the opposite—hence the wrong—way, and re-nailed it Fortunately, you can see the Peak itself ahead and above you as you walk, or these vandalised red markers would by now have led to climbers getting lost. But what about at twilight? Then such vandalism becomes extremely dangerous.

Decades-old graffiti in Lucifer's Cranny close to the top of the Peak. What a wonderful advertisement they are for Quorn!

28th June 2016, lack of signage at a corner in the trail on top of the ridge led a climber to get lost when he continued north along the top instead of east down the Peak. A huge rescue effort by the Quorn SES, CFS, SA Ambulance, SA Police, and other Quorn residents found him late that night, suffering badly from the cold. (See the Mercury, August 2016, pp 3–4.)

Yet nothing's been done to remedy the dangerous signage shambles that still exists, You can only say, 'Disaster!—waiting to happen'.

And...All that Graffiti

THERE'S A LONG, narrow cranny at the summit. You climb out of it up to either Little Devil's Peak on its northern side (as most do), or the Devil's Peak itself on its southern side.

More graffiti at the top of Lucifer's Cranny. There's plenty of it! There's even some on Armchair Rock between 0.8 & 1.0 km Lucifer's Cranny is spectacular, but at its sublime top end you're surrounded by hideous graffiti. One obviously local graffito even says that 'Quornies Rules'. What do you think overseas climbers think of all of that? What an advertisement for Quorn! When they get back to their own countries, what'll they say about it?

Pictures — From the Past

THE QUORN LOCOMOTIVE Running Sheds at the start of the 20th century. The two locomotives are Y Class, built 1885–98 by Beyer Peacock & Co.; J. Martin & Co. Gawler; and at the Islington Workshops. They were used between Pt Augusta and Farina. There look to be around 54 men posed here, though the top right one may be a woman. Presumably they're Quorn Railways Staff—how big a staff is that? Notice the loco head-lamps are oil? In August 2021's Pictures From the Past, p 30, was a similar photo with posed staff from 1882, with two X Class locos, found in the Back to Quorn Sept. 24–30 1928 Carnival Souvenir booklet, on p 50.

AN EARLY COMMON type of mass transport was the 'charabanc' (French, char à bancs, 'car with benches', ie the seats go right across without a middle passageway). A 1950s charabanc is shown in the May 2020 Pictures From the Past, p 42, in Warren Gorge, October 1958. Those Afghan Cameleers

MOST PEOPLE HAVE heard of the Afghan Camel Drivers, especially of Marree, and also of the camels imported to South Australia, particularly during the 19th Century. They were valuable for exploring our outback, and for carrying goods of all kinds where there were no trains or roads.

Today, vast numbers of the descendants of those camels roam wild across our outback. The top photo shows just one mob of feral camels on Durham Downs Station in Queensland. In fact, you may have read that Australian camels are in demand overseas today, where the local camels have become diseased, while ours aren't!

A long string of camels could be fastened from nose-peg to tail, and managed by one cameleer at the front, and another at the rear.

But what may surprise you is to find that most of these cameleers were not Afghans, and most of the camels were not from Afghanistan.

The darker parts of the map were British India in the 19th century. Afghanistan was not British, who fought Afghanistan three times, in 1838–42, 1878–79, and 1919. The British army in 1842 was almost entirely massacred.

Now see Baluchistan on the map. It's now a province of Pakistan, though trying to gain its independence today. In the 19th century it was part of British India It has great deserts, and its camels are some of the finest in the world.

Now, when Australia and India were parts of the British Empire, and the Afghans and British were enemies, ask yourself, 'How could South Australia buy camels and hire cameleers from Afghanistan?' Not only that, but Afghanistan was entirely landlocked, so where were its ports to ship such camels and cameleers from?

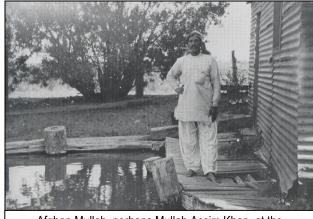

But notice one of British India's great port cities, Karachi (name slightly cut off), right on Baluchistan's south-eastern border. Sir Thomas Elder got his camels from Baluchistan and shipped them from Karachi, in 1866. And they were unloaded in January 1866 at Port Augusta. How much more sense does that make.

The Geographer Dr Tom McKnight in his 1969 book, The Camel in Australia, writes:

Throughout the history of camel-driving in Australia the natives who were brought as handlers were referred to as 'Afghans' or simply as 'Ghans'. Although a few actually originated in Afghanistan, the great majority apparently came from Rajasthan, Baluchistan, or near-by areas in what is now West Pakistan. Eventually a small number of handlers were brought in from Egypt, Persia and Turkey, and they, too, were invariably called 'Ghans'.

The famous Adelaide Islamist & Herbalist signed himself 'Mahomet Allum, Afghan, Kandahar' to show that he was a genuine Afghan.

The Hereford

THE HEREFORD IS one of the most numerous of all breeds in Australia. It is found throughout the country in all extremes of environment, but particularly in the central and south-eastern States, and in South Australia and southern Western Australia. Producers have been reaping the benefits with markets across SA having been exceptional early in March with firm prices across the board.

There has been speculation that the prices of cattle might begin to fall this year, the high prices have been gratefully accepted but all good things don't last forever.

PRR Open Day for Prospective Volunteers

ON 3 APRIL 2022 the Pichi Richi Railway Preservation Society will be hosting an Open Day to enable the public who may be interested in volunteering gain some insight into the organisation. The PRR will also be celebrating 20 years of operations out of Port Augusta, and this special train to Woolshed Flat will coincide with that milestone.

The Pichi Richi Railway Preservation Society is a key tourist attraction in the Flinders Ranges and could be regarded as Australia's largest working museum. This authentic heritage railway carries about 10,000 passengers during the "train running season" from March to November each year. At other times, work continues on various projects including carriage, loco and rolling stock mechanical restoration and track maintenance, and working bees are held to keep the railway in top working condition.

Opened in 1879, the railway through the Pichi Richi Pass was the first section of what became the Ghan Railway to Alice Springs. For nearly 70 years the train hauled people, coal, troops, livestock, minerals and agricultural products between Port Augusta, Quorn and beyond.

In 1973 the Pichi Richi Railway Preservation Society (PRRPS) was formed to preserve this line.

Operating between Quorn and Port Augusta, in the heart of the Flinders Ranges, PRRPS passengers can enjoy much of what the region has to offer, including magnificent scenery, local produce and the unique atmosphere of the town and surrounding area.

The first PRRPS passenger train departed Port Augusta at the conclusion of March 2002, after a major construction project saw our line extended from the then terminus at Stirling North, the project being awarded the 2002 Trackwork Achievement Award from the permanent way institute of South Australia.

Next year, the PRRPS celebrates 50 years since the Society was established during the inaugural meeting at Cooinda, with the key objective being to preserve the line. Since that date much of the heritage railway you see today is as a result of the volunteers' passion to restore, maintain, preserve and operate this precious Australian heritage narrow gauge railway running through the Pichi Richi Pass and preserving it for our future generations.

Recently the PRRPS won the SA Tourism Award Tourist Attraction category, an amazing achievement when you consider the entire railway is operated completely by its dedicated team of volunteers who work in various departments, including, but not limited to: Accounts, Marketing, Catering, Rolling Stock, Track, Structures, Locomotive, Restoration, Museum, Catering, Ticket Sales and on-board train carriage Guides (called Car Captains) who are responsible for pointing out the main points of interest along the trip, and passenger safety, amongst other things.

People of all ages, and capabilities are welcome to join us on the Open Day for a taste of the Pichi Richi Railway and experience a heritage rail trip from Port Augusta to Woolshed Flat and return, leaving Port Augusta around 10:30am and returning to Port Augusta about 2pm.

Volunteering enables you to learn new skills, join a team of people who come from all walks of life with a range of life skills, and make a contribution to the ongoing successful running of this iconic railway.

To attend the day, it is essential to register and obtain a complimentary ticket by contacting our volunteering manager: Bronwyn Ingram.

Home Recipes

Roasted Butternut and Spinach Quesadillas

Ingredients

1/2 butternut thinly slices
2 tbsp light oil
3 cloves garlic skin on bruised
350 gm baby spinach
grated cheese
Salt and pepper to taste
1tbsp chilli flakes
1 pack of 10 inch flat breads

Method

Cook Time as required, just minutes each. Serves 4-6

- 1. Pre heat oven to 180°C. Line a baking tray with baking paper.
- 2. Place the pumpkin slices onto the tray, drizzle with 1tbsp oil, add the garlic cloves and a good pinch of salt and pepper. Toss to combine.
- 3. Bake until the pumpkin is soft and lightly caramelised.
- 4. Sauté the spinach with the remaining oil and a good pinch of salt and pepper until wilted. Place spinach in a sieve over a bowl and allow to drain. Press as much of the liquid as possible from the spinach and set aside.
- 5. Heat a dry frying pan. When ready to serve take a wrap and add a sprinkle of cheese to one side. Top with a few slices of pumpkin, some wilted spinach and a pinch of chilli flakes. Add some more cheese and fold the wrap in half.
- 6. Place the folded wrap into the frying pan. Turn the quesadilla over after a few minutes or when the bottom is golden and toasty and the cheese is melting. Once the other side is toasted remove from pan.
- 7. Cut the cooked quesadillas into three and repeat with the remaining wraps.
- 8. Serve with your favourite dip.

Port Augusta Garden Club group (above) had a full day in Quorn Saturday 19 March to visit local gardens and reserves. Andrea Tschirner joined them for morning tea at Emily's Bistro where she gave a talk about some of the plants useful for digestive teas. Andrea then took them on a guided tour to Pithi Kawi—Quorn Bush Tucker Trail. It was a very warm, humid day and the shaded tables and seats were appreciated. After lunch the group visited Powell Gardens and especially enjoyed a refreshing walk along the shady Capowie Creek. In front is the group's leader on the day, Shirley Mundy.

Culprits caught. First one and then a second blue tongue lizard was found in my chook house enjoying the spoils—both have now been relocated.

March Full Moon 18.3.2022

The March Full Moon is referred to as the Worm Moon. It is so called because, as temperatures warm, earthworm casts begin to appear and birds start finding food. It also has multiple other names including the Sap Moon, Crow Moon and Crust Moon, while its Anglo Saxon name is the Lenten Moon. The Worm Moon graces our skies in the same month as the Spring Equinox.

Editors Note—The explanation for Worm Moon relates to the Northern Hemisphere.
